

In the elution circuit (strip circuit) the loaded carbon is screened to remove any debris before it gets cleaned. First, the carbon goes through an acid bath to remove any calcium or lime deposits. A pressurized tank uses a solution of hot water, cyanide and caustic sodium hydroxide to separate the gold from the carbon. The gold-bearing solution goes to a holding tank until it goes to the electrowinning cells.

